Kingson, Eric R., Lessons from Joan: Living and Loving with Cancer, a Husband's Story, reviewed by Katherine Adams, Feb. 65

HEALTH & SOCIAL WORK

Health & Social Work is a professional journal committed to improving social work practice and expanding knowledge in health care. Health is defined broadly to include both physical and mental health. The editorial board welcomes manuscripts on all aspects of health that are of professional concern to social workers. The journal carries articles on practice, social policy and planning, legislative issues, innovations in health care, and research.

To be generally acceptable to reviewers, submissions must

- be important to social work and relevant to health
- contain a clear statement of purpose and a consistent focus
- expand current knowledge
- build on the work of others
- contain a current and appropriate literature review
- clearly present complete methodology for a research article
- be well organized with a logical, orderly presentation
- soundly support conclusions with data or a logical argument
- contain a clear explication of the implications for social work.
- contain a cover letter stating that the work is original and has not been published elsewhere (either in print or electronically) and is not under review by another journal or publisher.

ARTICLES

Manuscripts for full-length articles should not exceed 20 pages, including references and tables. The entire review process is anonymous. At least three reviewers critique each manuscript; then the editor-in-chief makes a decision, taking those reviews into consideration. At this time, NASW Press does not accept electronic submissions.

COLUMNS

In Practice Forum authors describe practice innovations and action research. The editorial board designed the forum specifically to stimulate publication of material that is important to and written by practitioners. The editor invites practitioners to submit brief articles that describe new and effective programs, techniques, or policies and often assists authors in developing articles. Manuscripts should not exceed eight pages.

National Health Line reports current legislative and political issues that have implications for social work practice in health settings. It provides a link between social work practice and health care policy. The editor seeks to present contemporary issues that have the greatest potential impact on social work clients. Although the National Health Line editor writes the column, readers are invited to submit suggestions for topics.

Viewpoint features readers' comments and opinions on current issues in the profession. It offers writers an opportunity to express their opinions on issues that may have an impact on social work or social work clients in health or mental health settings. The maximum length for manuscripts is seven pages.

Letters to the Editor comment on issues covered in the journal or other points of interest to social workers in health or mental health settings to enhance professional dialogue. Letters should be no more than two pages.

To prepare your manuscript in the proper format for submission view Writing for the NASW Press: Information for Authors, at our Web site at www.naswpress.org. Submit one hard copy and one CD-ROM to
